Celebrating Juneteenth: THF Puts Texas' Black History Front and Center

Juneteenth, also known as Emancipation Day, Freedom Day, Jubilee Day, and Emancipation Proclamation Day, is an annual holiday commemorating the end of slavery in the United States. On June 19, 1865, Union General Gordon Granger read General Order No. 3 that more than 200,000 enslaved people were free. The Emancipation Proclamation was originally signed by Abraham Lincoln on January 1, 1863, to help end the Civil War by freeing enslaved people in the Confederate States of America. However, there were too few Union soldiers to enforce the proclamation, and the end of the war came in April 1865 with the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox. The Emancipation Proclamation ended in 1865 with Robert E. Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

In celebration of Juneteenth, the Texas Historical Foundation (THF) grants Deadlines Announced.
